Antônia, æ. f. Utrecht in Holland: called also Trajectum ad Rhenum.

Antoninus Pius, An emperor, who succeeded Hadrian, and was a very good prince.

Antoninus Aurélius, surnamed the Philosopher: a man of wonderful humanity, justice, temperance, and princely virtues, as his works still extant evidently shew; for he lived as he wrote. He took for his colleague, L. Aurelius Verus, after whose death he reigned alone, and had great success against the Germans, Sarmatians, Vandals, Quadi, and Marcomanni. Antoninus Commodus was the successor to his empire, but not to his virtues.

Antonius, M. An eloquent orator, slain with many other great men by the Maian faction. He had two sons, Marcus and Caius, the former whereof was a very profligate man. The latter, commanding some troops of Sylla's horse, plundered many places in Greece. Marcus Antonius, son of the former of these, and grandson of the orator, was the fountner of the civil war; for, being tribune, he left the city privately, and fled into Gaul to Cæsar. He invaded the province of Brutus, and by the persuasion of Cicero, the senate voted him an enemy to the republic. He was beaten by the two consuls, Hirtius and Pansa, and young Cæsar; but soon after he joined in a league with Octavius and Lepidus, and so their government was called a triumvirate. Immediately upon this he vanquished the forces of Brutus and Cassius at Philippi in Macedonia. He divorced his wife Fulvia, to marry Octavia, sister to Octavius. For the love he bore to Cleopatra, queen of Egypt, he divorced her also, which Octavius resenting, made war upon him, overcame him in a sea-fight at Actium, and forced him to flee to Alexandria, where, being besieged by Cæsar, in despair he fell on his own sword.

Antonius, Julius, the son of Marcus. He was consul with Paulus Fab. Maximus. To this man Horace addressed his second ode of the fourth book. He was guilty of notorious incontinence with Julia, the daughter of Augustus. Antonius, Gaius, he was of Gaul, but came to Rome, and taught rhetoric and poetry in the house of Julius Cæsar, when yet a boy. His school was frequented by Cicero, and other famous men. He set no price on his pains, and therefore his scholars were more liberal to him.

THE ROMAN CALENDAR.

In which, besides the series of the Months and Days, the different Festivals, Games, the Rising and Setting of the Constellations, and some other things worthy to be known, are taken notice of.

The Roman Month is divided into Calends, Nones, and Ides; all which are reckoned backward. The Calends are the first day of the Month; as Calendae Januariae is the first day of January; Pridie Calendarum vel Calendas, is the 31st of December; III. Cal. the 30th; IV. Cal. the 29th, &c. The Nones, being four, follow the Calends; as IV. Nonas Jan. is Jan. 2. III. Non. Jan. 3. Pridie Non. Jan. 4. and Nonae Jan. is Jan. 5. But, in March, May, July, and October, there are six Nones.^{*} After these, the Ides in each month are eight; as VIII. Id. Jan. (id est, Octavo Iduum, vel Idus), is Jan 6th, and so till you come to the Ides themselves, Idus Januariae, that is, Jan. 13. Where note, that, when the Accusative Case is used, the Preposition ante is understood; as III. Calendas, Nonas, Idus, tertio ante Calendas, Nonas, Idus; and remember that, after the Ides (which are on the 13th day of eight of the Months, and on the 15th of the other four which have six Nones each), the Calends following are to be reckoned to the next Month.

^{*} Sex Malus, Nones, October, Julius, et Mars;
Quatuor at reliqui.—Dabit Idus quilibet octo.

ROMAN COINS, WEIGHTS, AND MEASURES.

THE Romans reckoned their money by as, asses, sestertii or nummi, denarii, solidi or aurei, pondo, or libra.

As, as it denoted a particular coin, was at first libralls, or of a pound weight, and, even when it was diminished, retained the name of libella. The first impress of this coin was a Janus, and on the reverse the rostrum of a ship.

As was divided into twelve parts, the names of whose divisions were the following: uncia, sextans, quadrans, triens, quincunx, seculs, septunx, bes, dobrans, dextans, decunx.

Quadrans and teruncius are used to signify the smallest brass coin after the reduction of the as, as the sestertius was the least of the silver coins.

The as was first reduced to two ounces, then to one ounce, and at last to half an ounce.

The sestertius was a silver coin, equal to the fourth part of a denarius.

Nummus, when mentioned as a piece of money, was the same with the sestertius. So mille nummi, mille sesterti, and mille sesterti nummi, signify the same; as do likewise mille nummum, mille sestertium, and mille sestertium nummum.

Sestertium in the neuter gender signifies mille sestertium nummorum.

The marks of the sestertius nummus are IIS. LLS. HS. II-S. which characters denotes $\frac{1}{2}$ asses.

In speaking of sums above a thousand, there is often a twofold ellipsis, sometimes of the word sestertium, or its mark; sometimes of the word mille; as in Martialis vi. 10. Pueri Jovis nuper cum millia (sestertia) forte rogarem; and vii. 9. Septingenta (millia) Tito debet Lupus. There is another double ellipsis to be observed, when they use the numeral adverbs; as IIS. bis et triplex in annos singulos Ferri decernebatur, quod maioribus solvere, Cic. Verr. iii. 70; where centena millia is understood, scil. 3,200,000 nummi sesterti, or 3,200 sestertia. If the sum is to be reduced to nummi sesterti, then centum and mille both are understood, and that decies or 10 must be multiplied by 100,000. If you would reduce the sum to sestertia, the word centum being then understood, it must be multiplied only by 100. Thus decies IIS. is 1,000,000 nummi sesterti, or 100 sestertia.

Mille sesterti is only 1000 nummi sesterti, in English money 8l. 1s. 6½d. which makes a sestertium.

Mille sestertia is 1000 times that sum, viz. 807½l. 18s. 4d.

Milles IIS. is 100,000 times that sum, or 807,291l. 18s. 4d.

When the numbers have a line over them, centena millia is understood, as in the case of the numeral adverbs; thus IIS. MC. signifies the same with milles centes HS. that is 110,000,000 nummi, or 888,020l. 16s. 8d. whereas IIS. MC. without the cross line, denote only 1100 nummi, or 8l. 17s. 7½d.

When the numbers are distinguished by points in two or three different orders, the first towards the right hand signifies units, the second thousands, the third hundred thousands; for instance, III. XII. DC. HS. denotes 300,000, 12,000, and 600 HS. in all making 312,600 nummi, in English money 5047l. 3s. 9d.

Denarius was the chief silver coin among the Romans;

in weight, at first, the seventh part of a Roman ounce, which, according to Dr. Arbuthnot, consisted of 438 grains, and was equal to our Avoirdupois ounce; upon which calculation, an ounce of silver of that number of grains, would be in value 4s. 6½d.

The subdivisions of the denarius were the quinarus, or half, so called from its value of five asses; and likewise clefotatus, from the image of Victory sometimes impressed upon it; and the sestertius, which has been mentioned already.

The pondo argenti among the Romans is a sort of numeral expression of sums of money, and is different from the common libra, which consisted only of 64 denarii, or 96 drachms. The pondo, according to Budeus's valuation, amounts to the value of an Attic mina, 3L 4s. 7d. or, according to Agriicola, to 3L 2s.

The Roman ounce is the English avoirdupois ounce, which they divided into 7 denarii, as well as 8 drachms; and, since they reckoned their denarius equal to the Attic drachm, this will make the Attic weights $\frac{1}{8}$ heavier than the corresponding Roman weights.

Note. Those who do not understand decimal fractions, will observe that the denominator of every such decimal is a unit with as many cyphers as there are places of numbers in the fraction; that the decimal parts are separated from the integer by a full point, and that the first figure, or first two figures, in the decimal parts, are chiefly to be regarded, without considering the number of places; .5 is half, .25 a quarter; as in pes 11.604, which is 11 inches, and 604 thousandth parts of an inch, or very little more than half an inch; had it been .500, it would have been just half, or, if .250, just a quarter of an inch.
